CALL FOR PAPERS

Special Issue on Organizations, Technology, and Innovation

Administrative Science Quarterly announces a call for papers for a special issue, co-edited by Michael Tushman and Richard Nelson, on sources of technological change and technology-based innovation and the effects of technological change on organizational outcomes.

The purpose of this special issue is to provide a platform to synthesize and extend our understanding of (1) the sources of technology and its social and organizational advance, (2) the links between technological change and product and/or process innovation, and (3) the effects of technological progress on organizations at various levels of analysis (e.g., individuals, groups, organizations, populations).

Papers are solicited that examine such topics as:

- how technology accumulates or diffuses within and across industries
- determinants of technological change or its social structure
- links between technological change and product and/or process innovation
- interrelations between private organizations, universities, and governments in facilitating technological change
- effects of product/process innovation and/or technological change on populations of organizations, on industries, organizations, and individuals
- effects of organizational, economic, historical, and political factors on technological change

Authors should follow standard guidelines for ASQ papers as stated in the "Notice to Contributors" in each issue. Four copies of the manuscript should be sent to:

Special Issue Editors
Administrative Science Quarterly
Malott Hall
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853-4201

All papers will be evaluated using ASQ's standard blind-review process. Papers may be submitted any time from the present until June 1, 1989. The editorial review process will be on-going during that period, and papers will be accepted as they complete that process.

For further clarification, prospective contributors are encouraged to contact Michael Tushman, 719 Uris Hall, Graduate School of Business, Columbia University, New York, NY 10027 and/or Richard Nelson, 1403 School of International Affairs, Columbia University, New York, NY 10027.

This study takes into account the small amount of empirical evidence available on the structure and function of boards of directors and investigates, against the background of the current theoretical models, the following questions:

- what are the goal orientations of managers in public enterprise?
- how do managers view their own and their partners' roles?
- how do managers deal with the dual obligation of public interest and efficient commercial achievement?
- how do managers deal with the dilemma of 'autonomy versus control'?
- how do managers cope with the stress of their role?

As a result of poor managerial policies and practises, universities often experience zero-growth; some even enter into periods of declining enrollment. This exploratory study is designed to identify ways in which universities can improve their managerial policies and practises through extensive analysis of the conditions which directly affect academic leadership. The book examines important issues such as the selection and training of academic administrators and concludes by high-lighting both theoretical and practical applications of the study.
